STORY 2

Trade is an activity that has been practiced by the human race since time immemorial and reached its peak in the 18th Century. Initially, this trade was done in a primitive manner because quantity and quality was not considered. Trade therefore, is the buying and selling of goods and services. The form of trade and the way it is carried out has constantly changed and improved with time.

In Africa and Zambia in particular, trade traces its roots from the era of the slave trade. The development of the manufacturing industry in Europe led to the demand for raw materials and labour to work on the plantations in America. Africa was seen as the source of both cheap labour and raw materials. This marked the beginning of the slave trade, and it continued for many years. The slaves were expected to work extra hard on the plantations.

Farming activities on the plantations increased because of the demand for raw materials. Because of the nature of the trade, it formed a pattern which became known as the “Triangular Slave Trade”.

Now do questions 49 – 54

Slaves were used to • • •
A  operate machines.
B  work in factories.
C  work on the plantations.

   D  Asia

54  In the story “quantity and quality were not considered” means that trade was • • •
   A  unfairly done.
   B  fairly done.
   C  good.
   D  profitable.

STORY 3

We have seen that Scouting is a Movement for young people, with its emphasis on camping, the outdoors and all those activities which are attractive to boys and girls, but so are many other youth organisations. Scouting is however, unique.
What makes it so is something called “ethos” of Scouting. “Ethos” is a Greek word which means the “Spirit.” The essence of this spirit is found in the Scout Promise and the Law. Most of the young people who enter the Scout Movement are attracted by the outdoor life, the camping, but hardly the spirit as such. It is the responsibility of Scout leaders to guide the young people, so leaders should know what it is all about.
Now do questions 55 – 60
